• British Library Digitizing Rare Printed Bengali Books

The British Library, which is leading an international partnership to digitize rare material from its South Asian printed book collection, has scanned 1,000 old and rare printed Bengali books of the 19th century. As part of the 'Two Centuries of Indian Print' (TCIP) project, in total, 4,000 early printed Bengali books, amounting to more than 800,000 pages, will be digitized and made freely available online.

"So far we scanned 1,000 books. There are books literally from every discipline you could think of. There are treatises on sciences, education, religion, missionaries coming to India and translation of the Bible," Tom Derrick, Digital Curator, TCIP told IANS here at the Jadavpur University on the sidelines of a symposium exploring the history of print in South Asia. The TCIP pilot project is a partnership between the British Library, the School of Cultural Texts and Records (SCTR) of Jadavpur University, Srishti Institute of Art, Design and Technology, and the Library at SOAS University of London, involving collaborations with the National Library of India.

It marks the start of a major Programme to share the wealth of Indian printed books held by the British Library dating from 1713 to 1914. Another aspect to the project is applying OCR (optical character recognition) to transcribe the Bengali script. OCR is the recognition of printed or written text characters by a computer. "We are dealing with historical Bangla and the changes in the language, so the typography is unique. It is underserved by commercial OCR whose focus is more on Western patterns," explained Derrick. To overcome these challenges, the library is running a competition to find an optimal solution for automatically transcribing the Bengali books that have been digitized as part of the project. "So over 20 institutes worldwide have signed up," he said. According to Layli Uddin, project curator (Bengali) at the British Library, the approach is three-pronged: cataloguing, digitizing and contextualizing. "We want to reach out to a wider audience, make the materials open and free to all, make it accessible to non-Bengali speaking audiences as well. Also to contextualize and that is where the Jadavpur University experts come in. They are helping identify what is unique and rare in BL's collection in printed form which are not available elsewhere in the world," Uddin told IANS.

• No GST on books, but prices set to rise

Book lovers and students will now have to pay more as books will become costlier by 10-20 per cent under the Goods and Services Tax regime. Though books continue to remain exempt under GST, but inputs such as printing, binding and royalties to authors now attract tax at 12 per cent.

Since the publishers don't get input tax credit, they now propose to pass it on to customers. "Books are not taxable under GST, but we are at a disadvantage as we lose out on input tax credit. Prices of books will increase by 15 per cent to 20 per cent," said Amit Bhargava, Director of Taxmann. The company publishes legal books on topics such as direct and indirect tax laws, banking and company laws that are also used by University students. Starting July 1, it has already hiked prices of books to reflect the changes with GST. But on the ground, it is unlikely that prices of your favorite bestseller would have increased immediately, although retailers expect a hike in the coming months. Nabhi Kumar Jain, owner of Jain Book Depot, the iconic landmark located in Connaught Place, believes consumers are bound to see the impact of GST on books in the next one or two months. Jain who also run Nabhi Publications, said, "We have not changed the MRP of books currently but we believe books will see an upward revision in prices in the next 1-2 months." Publishers of school textbooks are also planning to hike prices, but it is expected from the next academic session. Subash Goel, Treasurer, Federation of Educational Publishers in India, said, "We believe that MRP of books could go up by 12-15 per cent as costs of publishers have gone up under the GST regime." He added the 12 per cent GST being imposed on author royalties will be through reverse charges so publishers will not be able to avail themselves of any input tax credit on this cost. The GST on royalties is being seen as the biggest challenge by the industry, which will neither help the publisher, the reader or the author.
