Professional News

- University of Alberta Libraries is digitizing more than 14,000 Master's and PhD Thesis (in Partnership with Internet Archive)

The University of Alberta Libraries is digitizing more than 14,000 Master's and Ph.D theses produced at the university since its establishment in 1908, as a part of a program that aims to digitize as much of the libraries' print collection and make it accessible to everyone. It partnered with the Internet Archive, a San Francisco-based non-profit digital library that works to digitize the world's knowledge and make it freely available, in 2008. So far, 102,759 of the libraries' items have been digitized with Internet Archive, including more than 2,200 theses.

While many libraries are doing some digitization, the Internet Archive scanning centre, housed in Libraries' Research & Collections Resource Facility (RCRF), provides state-of-the-art equipment staffed by Internet Archive employees.

It is one of only two set up in Canada. The other is at the University of Toronto. "We're a regional hub for digitization activities, so we get inquiries from smaller regional libraries asking about the program and asking us to do some digitization. It would be great to expand that," Betz said (head of library publishing and digital production services at the University of Alberta). "Libraries are collaborative by nature. There are lots of other, smaller libraries in the province that would benefit from access to this kind of equipment, so I'm thinking a lot about ways that we could do that, which would make sense for both of us." Digitized U of A materials are uploaded into Internet Archive's online collection and also stored in the university's own Education Research Archive (ERA), a large digital repository of materials that has more sophisticated searching functions than the Internet Archive.

In addition to the partnership with Internet Archive, Libraries also has a substantial collection of titles digitized through other vendors available in the Peel's Prairie Provinces collection.
